

PS 215: International and Current Problems

Study of current issues in international politics from both the historical and analytical points of view. Examination of relevant conceptual schemes and frameworks in international politics and discussion of the nature of political choices and decisions and their impact in the international system. This course will count as a sociology major elective.

Hours: 3

Program: Political Science

Semester Offered:

Spring even